On reduction, an azo dyestuff undergoes cleavage at each of the azo groups which it may contain, each nitrogen atom of each azo radical yielding an amino group. Hence one of the reduction products must always be identical with a first component except in cases when the first component itself contains reducible groups. Second and third components, on the contrary, are not obtained as reduction products, but we secure in their place their amine derivatives. Thus, Congo Red, which has benzidine as its first, and naphthionic acid as its second component, gives benzidine as its first reduction product, and di-aminonaphthalenesulphonic acid as its second reduction product. $C_8H_4.N_2C_1.CeH.N_2.C, O_2H.
